A girl whispered to her boyfriend during a chemistry exam asking if she could borrow his calculator when he was done with it after supposedly forgetting hers in the room. The boyfriend turned in his test and then handed off his calculator. However, the calculator still displayed all the answers to the exam, answers the girl found worthy of copying. His story is that it was “an accident” and he forgot to clear his work before running off to his next class. Should any students be found guilty of an Honor System violation? If yes, what penalty should be assigned?
